

Call for Papers:

PolSci is the first Romanian peer-reviewed journal of political science edited and published twice a year by the Romanian Academic Society, a Bucharest – based think tank with the mission of advancing ideas of liberty, democracy and sound government.

The journal accepts a diverse range of articles from the political science field covering Romanian or broader Central or South - East European issues. Papers must be theory-grounded and based on solid empirical work. Contributions drawing upon inferential analysis are especially encouraged, as are papers from fields currently under-covered, such as comparative politics, public policy, political economy, or political psychology.

Essential for successful submissions is that the article addresses an important topic, respects the canons agreed in contemporary political science, and shows perfect knowledge of previous theoretical contributions. Articles must be written in English, the ideal length being anywhere between 4000 and 8000 words. Longer articles can be considered on the basis of exceptional merit. Please use numeric endnotes only, mark them in the text with superscript fonts (not automatic), limit their number to a minimum, and use consistently one citation system throughout your paper.

Papers will be reviewed by board and staff members, but not only. The reviewers' names are confidential, but authors will receive copies of the reviews and they might be asked to make some modifications in order to have their articles published. We do not publish unsolicited essays or op-eds.

Contributions are welcome any time of the year and will be considered for the next issue. Electronic submissions are acceptable in Word for Windows '95 or '98, at office@sar.org.ro. Hard copies are also accepted if accompanied by the electronic format on a floppy disk and sent to Societatea Academica din Romania, Str. Petofi Sandor 15, Bucuresti 1, Romania.
